Thinking With Poetry

koje će održati

Anna Christina Ribeiro

(Texas Tech University)

Abstract:

Poetic language is sensuous and imagistic: its sounds often form a rhythm, and its images ground us in the concrete world. Moreover, the rhythm and images of a poem seem inextricable from what it says. These features would seem to make poetry inimical to the kind of abstract thinking characteristic of philosophy, and that in turn would seem to prevent poetry from conveying truths. Yet at the same time, we think of poems as conveyors of some of our most abstract thinking and deepest truths. My aim will be to show how the sensuous and imagistic aspects of poetry—its formal and figurative aspects—are not obstacles to but rather facilitators of abstract thinking.
